11 BRADEN

Dear Braden,

Thank you for being one of the first to take a risk and create your sand tray in a crowded playroom in front of others.

Thank you for honoring the sacredness of your story by typing it in a solitary space on the computer at your own pace.

Thank you for showing others how you “accepted your Cancer”- by carrying peace, community, charity and belief along with you.

Surrounding you in hope,
Jenni

Braden's Sand Tray

All the stones represent the path through all the treatments.

The red sand represents fire.

The first stone means that I had to find peace and accept that I did have Cancer.

Through the first couple of treatments, there were several charities to help raise money for me.

I had lots of friends that visited a lot, they really helped me.

I had to believe that I could do all the treatments and that my hair would come back and be just fine in a year and a half.

The bridge represents the MIBG (type of Cancer therapy) valley that I had to cross. I had to have faith that the treatments would work.

The trophy stands for being NED (No Evidence of Disease)!!!

The footprints represent God helping me along the way.
